ROBERT EDGREN.FIGHTERS WIN
PUBLIC FAVOR
IN MANY WAYS

Popularity Is Gained In and Out of the Ring by Honesty, Gameness, Aggressiveness and Generosity.

R. Edgren's
COLUMN

POPULARITY in the ring isn't all a question of fighting ability. Some of the greatest fighters living will be forgotten long before men stop talking about John L. Sullivan, Jack Dempsey, Kid Lavigne and others of the old-timers.

John L. Sullivan's popularity never wanes. No one can explain exactly why it grows with age. Some think it is because Sullivan always fought to win, and to win as quickly as possible. Others say it is because of John's prodigality in money matters. Sullivan's great, deep voice and his personality may have something to do with it. But whatever the cause, John L. is still the most popular of all living fighters.

JEFFRIES, the greatest heavy-weight that ever lived, has been less of a favorite. Perhaps it was because the spectators' sympathies naturally went out to the smaller men he met in the ring. "What chance has any man against such a mountain?" they asked, and then they rooted for the victim. Since his retirement from the ring Jeff has become far more popular than in the best of his fighting days. Ten years from now, when some new heavy-weight wears the crown, Jeffries will be as popular as Sullivan is to-day. Men will talk over his old battles and tell the newer generations what a marvel Jeffries was in his day.

Jim Corbett was a very well-liked champion when the feeling aroused by his defeat of the favorite (Sullivan) had worn away. Jim was a great spender during his championship days. He was nearly as prodigal as John himself.

Fitzsimmons became unpopular when he gave such a terrific beating to Jack Dempsey, the idol of all followers of the fighting game. But Fitz had to beat the game "Nonpareil" just the way he did beat him. In the middle of the fight Fitz, finding that he had Dempsey outclassed, begged Jack to quit and save himself. Dempsey wouldn't do it, and Fitz had to knock him out. Fitzsimmons' long career, however, has won him a place among the favorite heroes of the ring. To-day, although he has suffered defeat, he has a greater following than when in his prime.

Admirers of flat battles in New England will be given another chance to witness an important international fight to-night. The pugilists who will engage in this encounter will be Darkey Haley, the crack English feather-weight, and Al Belmont, one of the best light fighters in that section. They will meet in a twelve-round bout before the Valley Falls (N. Y.) 12 rounds.

George Brown, the immensely popular "Little Chocolate" never brags about his ring record. He is always ready to go to work, and when he finally strikes a losing streak he has no excuse to offer.

Peter Jackson, the great heavy-weight, was popular here, and in England was as great a favorite as John L. Sullivan in the States.

MAURICE was never much of a favorite, although he could fight Maher and Ruhlman were two good men who didn't acquire any great amount of public affection. Both were strong, hard, and in the ring, Maher and Ruhlman were two good men who didn't acquire any great amount of public affection.

Tom Sharkey's only drawback was his reputed closeness. But the game fight the squatty heavy-weight made against the giant Jeffries helped. Then everyone tells stories of Sharkey's expense. You can't drink a man who gives you a chance to get off a good one now and then.

Young Corbett's virtue lasted for a long time. He was a fighter-gamer, modest and a second John L. as a sound fighter.

KID MCCOY was one of the greatest fighters of his time. But his cruelty in the ring made him feared more than admired. Nelson's fear and aggressiveness alone would make him a favorite with followers of the game. But Nelson was too much of a public. It was Nelson, out of Goldenrod, who stood as Nelson's corner when the Dane was linked flat, and shrieked: "Put his black head off to follow. It was Nelson who told Nelson to fight and Nelson only followed instructions.

Nelson would be immensely popular but for this manager. While Nelson has a foul manner of using his head in fighting, it is not premeditated, but is only a part of his natural bulldog. Nelson's fear and aggressiveness alone would make him a favorite with followers of the game. But Nelson was too much of a public. It was Nelson, out of Goldenrod, who stood as Nelson's corner when the Dane was linked flat, and shrieked: "Put his black head off to follow. It was Nelson who told Nelson to fight and Nelson only followed instructions.

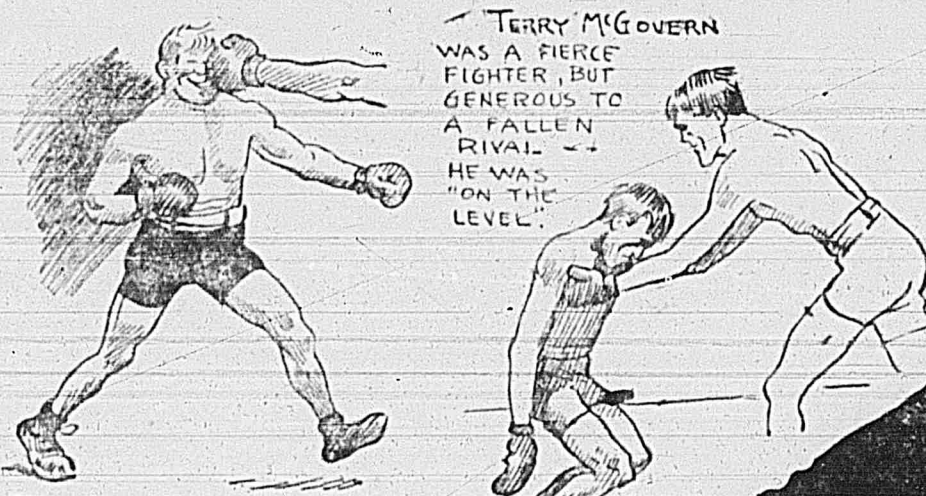

N O old-timer will ever forget Kid Lavigne. I saw Lavigne go down to defeat for the first time in his life. Lavigne was the peerless light-weight champion then, and never squabbled over weights like the modern fighters. In San Francisco he fought mysterious Billy Smith for the welter-weight championship. The weight was too much for him.

For eleven rounds Lavigne carried the fight to Smith furiously. Then the mysterious scrapper right-crossed Lavigne on the tip of the chin, staggering him. Immediately Smith picked up a fury. Lavigne fought back gamely. In the fourteenth round he was beaten all over the ring until at last he stood with his arms dangling at his sides, still smiling as he waited for the knockout. Lavigne's brother threw in the sponge and stopped the fight, and the boxing world was so enraged at even this showing of the white flag that he wouldn't speak to his brother for a year afterward. He certainly was game. He out-guessed Walcott and made the "Demon" quit.

Joe Walcott, although a wonder, was not popular. He fought too often. So with Jack O'Brien, who became a really very clever fighter, Jack never hesitated.
